earth is changing in ways it hasn't for hundreds of thousands of years at the same time christianity is breaking away from its millennium long geographical and cultural center in the euro west its growth is in asia africa and latin america primarily in pentecostal evangelical and independent churches these dramatically changed planetary and ecclesial landscapes have led many to conclude that we need a new way of thinking about our collective existence who are we and what is the nature of our responsibility in this deeply altered world to address that question biblical scholars bruce c birch and jacqueline e lapsley and christian ethicists larry l rasmussen and cynthia moe lobeda carry on a new conversation that engages how christians are to understand the authority and use of scripture the basic elements of any full bodied christian ethic attuned to our circumstances and the nature of our responsibility to our planetary neighbors and creation itself

this book puts forward a controversial argument which has not been countered in the decade since it first appeared underlying its approach is the view that the new testament may be of less relevance to the modern world than is commonly supposed the ethical perspective of jesus professor sanders argues is so inescapably linked to his expectation of the imminent coming of the kingdom of god that the two cannot be separated paul shares jesus expectation of an imminent end and consequently makes frequent use of arbitrary divine pronouncements and so on professor sanders makes it quite clear that the years have not made him change his mind over essentials of course scholarship has moved on but if i were revising the present work i would still continue to hold that jesus provides no guide for ethics today that paul's ethics are equally eschatologically orientated except for his brief glimpse of the transcendence of love and also that john's simple ethics are intended to be valid only in the church not generally i would also still maintain that james offers more promise for providing a continuing christian ethical base than do the other new testament writers for it is james who best points beyond the disappointment of eschatological hopes to the real world and to everyday problems controversial this thesis may be but there is much to be said for it and it cannot be pushed aside jack t sanders was professor of religious studies in the university of oregon
